

Peter Tanuseputro Bio

Peter completed training as a Public Health and Preventive Medicine physician, and as a Family Physician at the University of Toronto. He is now a Clinician Scientist in the Division of Palliative Care, University of Ottawa, working with a team that uses linked routinely collected data, such as those held at ICES, to develop population perspectives on aging and end of life. He is passionate about improving the reach of palliative and end-of-life care through the creation of digital tools and by influencing policy. Peter also practices family medicine in the community, including performing home visits for his dying patients.
