Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder in Palliative Care Patients and Caregivers

Kanza Mirza, Joshua Jarod Ling, Daniel Oliver Read, Patricia Anne Valcke
Schulich School of Medicine and Dentistry, Western University, London ON

9%
Prevalence of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) in the general population [1]

Hospice patients:
• Lack of screening
• Multiple diagnoses
• Inadequate investigation
• Inappropriate treatment [2]

Objectives

- To determine the prevalence of PTSD because of illness related traumas among patients with life-limiting illness nearing the end of their life.
- To explore and understand the traumatic events that patients with life-limiting illnesses experience throughout their illness journey and interactions with the health care system.

Methods

Participants: Current hospice patients and patient caregivers at the Hospice of Windsor and Essex County hospice residences

- Administration of questionnaire regarding illness course, treatments and ICU and hospital admission
- Administration of PCL-5 with Criterion A (DS-5) screening tool with a cut off of 21 to identify patients who meet the DSM-5 diagnostic criteria of PTSD
- Identification of common hospital and illness-related themes through patient/caregiver interviews regarding traumas

Interim Results

Discussion

- Diminished healthcare capacity due to COVID-19
 - A reduction of > 1 million cancer care episodes and a 11% reduction in in-patient capacity
 - Healthcare worker shortage in Canada
 - Half of all ICU patients report inadequate healthcare staff communication
- Caregiver burnout: a significant problem in healthcare
 - PTSD-like symptoms appeared in 18.7% of informal caregivers
 - Includes caregivers for patients with an expected death
- Unexpected result as ICU/hospital admission tend to correlate with increased PTSD symptoms
 - More data likely needed due to small sample size
- Proposed solutions to reduce hospitalization trauma:
 - personalization
 - reduce testing
 - promote rest by reducing hospital noise
 - increase communication with caregivers

Limitations & Conclusions

- Limitations included:
 - Subjectivity of the PCL-5 survey
 - Individuals declining the study because they don't believe they have PTSD
 - Diagnoses and treatments may be too recent
 - Difficult to engage with patients who were often non-verbal
- Conclusion:
 - Initial data indicates a significant proportion of PTSD-like symptoms in palliative care patients and their caregivers
 - Sources of trauma were often related to the healthcare system shortcomings
